Dear Sir/Madam,

On Nov 7, the Brevo platform was used to send messages classifiable under the UK Malicious Communications Act. Subscribe data from our website was downloaded without authorisation from our content management system by a former editor who was removed under grounds of serious misconduct. This individual illegally downloaded a snapshot of the site's membership database, then uploaded it to a paid Brevo account in order to carry out elements of a campaign of criminal harassment.

Restorationist subscribers did not consent at any time to their contact information being uploaded to Brevo and we have received multiple complaints about this individual (please see attached). We have addressed their concerns as quickly as possible and taken action to ensure the security of all of electronic systems from further misuse. We will support any claim they make and cooperate fully with the UK ICO or any other investigating body on their behalf.

The "View in Browser" link for the malicious communication used was:

Please note the claims made in this communication are utterly false and defamatory. The author has no legal or right to anything to do with the Restorationist at all. Moreover, the small percentage of information circulated which was correct was produced illegally and contains extremely private contact information of third parties which have absolutely no connection to the Restorationist or its readers.

Please be advised accordingly and act to preserve evidence where necessary for any future investigation.

Alex
